Information Security

Many regard the 21st century to be the era of the “information age”. With the proliferation of information, so does the need for securing vital information from data or networks. Information includes intellectual property ranging from business documents; trade secrets to even confidential data such as customer information require stringent safeguard protection.

Threats have evolved and progressed but we can mainly classify them as internal and external threats. Several principles remained in information security such as confidentiality, integrity, availability of information.

Many organizations are focused on the management of external threats but more often than not sources of compromise actually originate from within.

Information Workflow

In an age where information travels at super high speeds, we are constantly challenged with massive information loads which are demanding individuals as well as team to strive for greater efficiencies. It gives birth to a whole new generation of tools and solutions to manage and process information more efficiently.

When we discuss workflow management, we bring in process management, planning, organizing and scheduling components. Mind maps serve up as ways of improving efficiencies in planning and management, while speech-to-text technologies, ready design templates enhance efficiencies by reducing the time spent on certain tasks and hence increasing the capacity to multi-task.
